3,000 Policemen Take Communion At the Cathedral

Members of Holy Name Society March to St. Patrick's; Resolution to Hardening Commends Tolerance

Three thousand policemen, members of the Holy Name Society, Branch 175, attended mass yesterday at St. Patrick's Cathedral and received Holy Communion. They then marched to the Hotel Commodore, where their annual communion breakfast was held.

Among the speakers at the breakfast were Justice Victor J. Dowling, Martin Conboy, Judge Harry Tiernan, of Richmond, and Police Commissioner Enright. The topic of talk was based on recent utterances made by President Harding to a gathering of Baptists in Washington, at which he deplored religious intolerance and classed it as one of the reasons for the disquiet into which regard for law had fallen.

A resolution was adopted and sent to the President expressing the gratitude of the society for his words against intolerance among religious bodies and to assure him that the society would do all in its power to bring about a spirit of co-operation among all.

The members of the society entered the Cathedral at 8 o'clock in columns of four. Mass was celebrated by Archbishop Patrick Hayes, supreme director of the Holy Name Society, who was assisted by Monsignor John Dineen and Monsignor Michael J. Lavelle.

Chaplain John J. Coogan, spiritual director of the society, presided at the breakfast and introduced Justice Dowling.

"Our President, perhaps, faces more than any other President the danger that lies ahead from the little respect which citizens to-day hold our laws," said Justice Dowling. "He realizes that danger, and realizes that we must have more Godfearing men like you, who openly profess their faith, if this country is to be saved from great disaster."

"President Roosevelt never failed to preach the doctrine that spiritual development of a people must keep pace with the material. We need another Roosevelt to warn the nation that we are suffering from a lack of respect for authority that comes from a lack of respect for the religious side of our life. What we need is old-fashioned respect for authority."
